Though he hoped to plot a path out of chaos, Macron's errors prolong a political crisis in France

Despite having made several appearances during the Olympic Games, Emmanuel Macron retreated to his gambling house with bonus registration for a large part of his vacation in southern France during the Games. From there, having called for a political truce while Paris hosted a spectacular sporting competition, the French president expected to chart a path to exit the autocracy created by his gambling house with bonus registration for a decision to call an early election in mid-summer.

Nothing of that sort happened. The Olympic athletes have long since departed, and the traditional rentrée of September is approaching. But no new government is in power - the longest hiatus since immediately after the Second World War - and the bitter reign continues. This week, Mr. Macron used his presidential power to disqualify any candidate for prime minister proposed by the New Popular Front (NFP), the left-wing alliance that recently won the July election.

That was the last error in his gambling house with bonus registration, a tragicomic series of mistakes. No parliamentary formation has a majority in the Assembly, and a minority government from the NFP would have a difficult job of surviving for any length of time. But the result would be more democratically clean. Instead, it seems that the president expects to form a coalition complacently leaning to the right; one that, above all, will leave his unpopular reforms intact.

That will not be an easy task. The presidency of Macron is now gravely compromised. Humiliated by Marine Le Pen in the June European elections, he expected to restore his authority in legislative elections by surprising the right with a "front republican" to check the extreme right. This strategy of rehabilitation was defeated by the unity and success of the left. For ambitious conservatives, the prospect of tying their fortunes to a lame duck is still not tempting.

But it is not all about the president and his desires, or at least it should not be. With a combination of subtlety, audacity, and technical brilliance, Mr. Macron divided and governed French politics since 2017. But, indulging his characteristic desire to remain completely in control of events, even after losing, he is acting against the best interests of the country he leads.

The loss of confidence in politics contributed to the growth of the extreme right across Europe, just as in France. In the face of this scenario, refusing to give the narrow winners of the election at least a chance to forge a consensus is imprudent and shortsighted. Mr. Macron justified his posture by equating the extremes of the France Unbowed party of Jean-Luc Mélenchon (LFI) and the Rassemblement National of Marine Le Pen. But, after repeatedly depending on a broad front republican, including the LFI, to keep Ms. Le Pen out of power, this is clearly dishonest.

For now, France is adrift. Mrs. Le Pen - whose eyes have always been on the 2027 presidential election - can afford to wait while the conventional politics unfolds. The prospect of government remains remote. The interim prime minister of Macron, Gabriel Attal, is currently working on a provisional budget for the autumn, which he admits could be overturned by his successor. Hubris, once again, led the president to this situation. A new humility in his gambling house with bonus registration is part of the solution.

será necessária para tirar a França disso.
